INTRODUCTION

In early March, the COVID-19 pandemic forced CEOs to take on the role of Crisis Executive Officer as they led their companies, employees, and consumers through unprecedented times. More recently, they are being asked to authentically lead with purpose as the country reckons with racial inequality.

To help organizations better understand the role their leaders should play, Morning Consult surveyed thousands of consumers, investors, and public opinion leaders on what they expect from CEOs today, and how that is evolving as new challenges emerge at a rapid pace. This research looks at both the most important brand drivers for CEOs when it comes to their reputation and job performance, as well as key insights into how COVID-19 and the Black Lives Matter movement are changing those expectations.
Morning Consult surveyed over 11,000 consumers, financial decision-makers, high net worth individuals, politically-engaged audiences, and key opinion leaders in May and June 2020 to provide unparalleled insight on evolving expectations, performance evaluations and overall perceptions of top CEOs and business leaders.

Morning Consult determined the drivers behind CEO reputation by asking respondents to assess 315 CEOs and business leaders, including CEOs of most Fortune 250 companies and nearly all of the CEOs of the 200 most advertised brands in the U.S. Respondents were asked a range of questions about a given CEO, including an evaluation of favorability, news buzz, and overall job performance. Respondents also rated CEOs on 48 attributes, evaluating their public persona, leadership style, vision, personal integrity, shareholder value, stakeholder engagement, societal impact, handling of COVID-19, and more.

Overview Of Findings

A CEO’s Role in the Context of Society Is Rapidly Expanding
CEOs are in the spotlight today more than ever, and the events of recent months and weeks have only accelerated the evolution of a CEO’s remit: The most important attribute that contributes to a CEO’s reputation is that they are contributing positively to society.

Stakeholder Capitalism is Here to Stay
Prioritizing customer and employee needs while also acting in the best interest of shareholders, suppliers and society is important to decisionmakers and also drives CEO reputation and performance. This trend has been strengthening since late 2019, when the importance of employees began gaining precedence while that of shareholders began waning.

The Current Challenge & Evolving Opportunity
Sixty-nine percent of adults say that how CEOs react and express themselves on topics such as Black Lives Matter will permanently affect their decision to buy from their company and 71% of consumers feel CEOs are responsible for helping during the pandemic. Companies that step up for consumers in this time will benefit in terms of favorability and loyalty.
WHAT DRIVES CEO REPUTATION TODAY
What Matters – And What Doesn’t

To determine what drives CEO reputation and performance, Morning Consult looked at 48 CEO attributes, comparing those which respondents said were and weren't important to them to the proven drivers of CEO performance across KPIs. The results from the driver analysis reveal what matters now, what doesn't, and what could matter in the future.
The Top Drivers of CEO Reputation

Of the 48 attributes tested, these 10 had the strongest relationship with CEO reputation and performance:

1. Is contributing positively to society
2. Is trusted by the general public
3. Has led / is leading their company to make a positive impact on the world
4. Is an exceptional role model - sets an example of strong and effective leadership for others to follow
5. Leads with fairness and integrity
6. Demonstrates a sense of responsibility to act in the best interest of customers and society
7. Leverages their position of power to help others, give back and/or make a difference in society
8. Is authentic and real
9. Is credible - delivers on promises
10. Is well-respected in their industry
